Michelle Garcia Winner, MA, CCC-SLP

A Congressional award-winning therapist and author, Michelle developed the Social Thinking approach for treating students with autism spectrum disorders, ADHD, NLD and other social and communication difficulties. The Journal of Autism and Developmental Disorders published research supporting her methods for high-functioning autism and Asperger syndrome. She serves on the panel of professional advisers of the Autism Society of America and runs a clinic in San Jose, CA. Michelle's books and curriculum materials are used in schools, homes and therapy rooms around the world.

Thinking About YOU Thinking About ME

- * Learn how the Social Thinking concept of "perspective-taking" makes the research into "Theory of Mind" practical for treating students
- * Understand your own ability to take the perspectives of others and why this is important
- * Explore functional educational strategies that facilitate growth in the thinking of students who function higher on the autism spectrum or who are experiencing related challenges
- * Learn about a 4-step model for developing social communication skills

Implementing Social Thinking Concepts and Vocabulary into our School and Home Day: A Day to Develop Team Creativity

- * Examine ways to teach Social Thinking and related skills in the classroom during academic and social tasks, how to build teams and share the load of teaching these students
- * Learn how Social Thinking concepts develop the infrastructure for students to meet educational standards
- * See the connection of these concepts to reading comprehension, written expression and a range of other tasks
- * Gain practical insights into ways to teach students how to take these concepts out of the treatment room and into their real lives!
